

Two Dozen Law Firms and Departments Join Together to Fight Hunger

BY SUSAN DESANTIS

Twenty-four law firms and corporate legal departments are taking part in the fourth annual Justice Served campaign to raise money for the Food Bank for New York City.

The campaign, which kicks off today, has quadrupled in size and raised enough funds to provide more than 1.5 million meals since launching in 2016.

Participants include Alston & Bird; Bloomberg; Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft; Carter Ledyard & Milburn; Dentons US; Fenwick & West, Goldman Sachs; Herbert Smith Freehills; Jones Day; King & Spalding; Kramer Levin Naftalis & Frankel; McLaughlin & Stern; Morgan, Lewis & Bockius; Morgan Stanley; O'Melveny & Myers; Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison; Ropes & Gray; Shearman & Sterling; Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom and affiliates; Weil, Gotshal & Manges; Wells Fargo & Co.; White & Case; Winston & Strawn and Withers Bergman.

PHOTO: RICK KOPSTEIN

Lary Stromfeld.

“The need for hunger-relief efforts is acute,” Lary Stromfeld, a Cadwalader partner and founder of Justice Served, said.

Food Bank for New York City provides 58 million free meals annually to 1.4 million New Yorkers through a network of 1,000 charities and schools.

“In addition, during the recent government shutdown, thousands of federal employees showed up at pop-up food distribution sites organized by Food Bank,” Stromfeld said.

Law firms and legal departments can also support the Justice Served campaign by purchasing a table at Food Bank’s Can Do Awards gala on April 16 at Cipriani Wall Street.

The campaign runs through March 15. Register at www.foodbanknyc.org/events/justice-served.

Susan DeSantis is the deputy editor-in-chief of the New York Law Journal. She can be reached at sdesantis@alm.com. Twitter: @sndesantis